girl were found in a frantic state of grief.
Clara was their only grown child, and in addition was a lovable and dutiful daughter, and her mother's constant companion when not at work. Two younger children of about four and three years of age played about the floor, unconscious of their sister's fate.

Clara was a member of the De Witt Memorial Presbyterian Church on Rivington street, and when any of the Sunday-school teachers were away she took their place, besides having a small class of her own in the mission to Chinamen and the very poor.
